WORLD WAR WAS FOUGHT IN VAIN SAYS SPEAKER

The Memorial exercises sponsored by the News-Bulletin and held in the Mokena public school auditorium on Monday morning were very well attended.

A rather outstanding feature of the program was that it was presented by fully 100 per cent local people. Rev. Theo. Haeefe of the St. John Evan. church in his opening talk said that Memorial exercises are usually tied up with a religious form, but that this year the program would take on the form of a purely civic nature, but pointed out that we must not lose sight of the fact that religion has and still does play a vital part in the life of the nation. He stated that the world war which was fought to make the world safe for democracy, was fought in vain and that the dictators of Europe have virtually annihilated all democracies in the old world.

Rev. W. J. Geffert of the Immanuel Lutheran church gave a very able and significant address on the preservation of our constitutional form of government and made it very clear why we must throw out communism and all other isms if we want our form of government to endure. He also made it clear that the average citizen is too complacent and does not take enough interest in electing right kind of men to public office with the result that crooks and grafters are elected to important offices and when the citizen realizes his liberties are being threatened he begins to wail.

The Mokena school band and the school pupils furnished the musical program. The pupils led by Norman Williams gave the pledge to the flag. Editor Wm. Semmler read the roll of the 16 soldiers buried in the 3 Mokena cemeteries. The graves of the soldiers were decorated with flags and flowers before the exercises took place.

It has been suggested that business places in Mokena should close on Memorial day like they do in other towns and give the business men a chance to attend the exercises.

Lincoln Estates Student Receives Highest Grades

Russell Maatman, student at the district 156 school in Lincoln Estates in Frankfort township, received the highest grade in the examinations for graduating students from rural schools in Will County held last Saturday according to announcement made by Earl F. Booth, Will County Supt. of Schools.

Maatman has been attending the rural school of which Mrs. Hilda is the teacher.

Seek To Raise Tinley Tavern Licenses to $250

A move has been on foot recently to raise the saloon license fees in Tinley Park from the present rate of $100 per year to $250 per year. When the matter was brought up before the village board the last meeting the vote was three in favor and two opposed and one not voting on the matter. In as much as the law requires that four out of the six votes of the village trustees are required to carry the proposition the matter of increasing the saloon license has been held over to the next meeting of the village board which will be held the last Monday in June. It is said that the licenses will be increased to perhaps $200 per year, but that the board deems $250 an excessive license rate.

Mokena M. Y. O. To Play Dolton

The Mokena M. Y. O. base ball team will play Dolton here Sunday at Hayden field beginning at 2:00 o'clock sharp.

The Mokena M. Y. O. played Orland Park last Sunday. The score was 1 to 1 ending the game at the eighth inning. David Tierney pitched a two-hit game. Come out and support the Mokena Youth Organization.

St. Paul's School To Hold Picnic

The St. Paul's Lutheran church of Sedan Prairie will hold their annual school picnic on the church grounds next Sunday afternoon June 5, commencing at two p. m. There will be games and refreshments and a musical program consisting of the combined bands of Tinley Park and Frankfort. A cordial invitation to the public to attend is extended.

National Contest Winner To Be Featured at Banquet

The 31st annual banquet of the Frankfort Public School Alumni will be held on Tuesday, June 7 at 7:30 p. m. at St. Peter's Evangelical church social parlors.

The graduates of the class of 1938 and their parents are the honored guests for whom an interesting program has been planned.

A special feature will be an entertainment by the Bloom Township high school string sextette which recently achieved the highest possible ranking in the National music contest held in Elkhart, Ind.

Rev. Clarence E. Showalter of the First Presbyterian church of Chicago Heights and always a favorite with the younger generation, will give a short talk.

All members are urged to attend this reunion which is undoubtedly the only public school alumni remaining active after so many years.

Miss Lola Harnack will conclude her year as president and new officers will be elected following the banquet and program.

Mokena Orioles Win 2 In Row

Beat married men Sunday 15 to 5 and keep on to win over Chicago Heights Owls 13 to 6 on Memorial Day.

Geo. Heanline pitched for the married men Sunday in place of Pat Homerding who played at Orland. Heanline was relieved in the seventh by Guindon. Geo. Lauffer pitched all the way for the Orioles, and only allowed eight hits. The Orioles took the lead early and never were in any danger. A couple of the boys suffered minor hurts, C. Bormet was hurt in the leg late in the game and was replaced by E. Lauffer.

The Orioles were pretty much battered up and sore Monday but that didn't stop them much.

W. Cappel fielded a hot grounder from the bat of the first man up in the first inning and got himself a badly split finger. Frisch got a couple of fingers out of joint, H. Cappel wrenched his leg and Dick Walsh had a hand that was really pumped up from catching hot ones at first base.

The Orioles though found their batting eye and are really smacking the old ball around. Considering that we have only two bats and they we think they are fine.

They are showing great sportsmanship and a fine team spirit. We are sure they deserve the support of all you loyal fans and townfolk. Come out and get behind baseball in Mokena. Come on down and get yourself a afternoon of thrills and fun. Paid 12th of June, the Mokena Orioles play the Joliet Wisards an a baseball team. For real fun and a baseball don't miss it. Remer Sunday June 12.

Next Sunday, June 5 Sorney's Cyclones play Dolton at Mokena. Come on out and watch the next crop of ball players make history.

Lets all get behind these teams and pull together for Mokena and that grand old game of baseball.

Miss Amelia Duncan, 86 Years Life Long Mokena Resident Dies

Miss Amelia Duncan, aged 86 years, died at her home south of Mokena, June 1st, following a lingering illness. About three years ago she fell injuring her hip and from then on was confined to a wheel chair.

Her brother Elvis with whom she had been keeping house for many years, died during this time. In spite of her affliction and her great sorrow in the loss of her only brother and nearest of kin, Miss Duncan always had a pleasant word for all who came to see her and her sunny disposition made one feel they had been in the presence of a real Christian saint. She dearly loved the Bible and her favorite text was John 14:1-2: "Let not your heart be troubled. Ye believe in God, believe also in me."

Miss Duncan first saw the light of this world on a farm near Mokena, February 3rd, 1852, and for 86 years she resided in this community.

She was the daughter of Tilford and Lucy Ann Owen Duncan. There are no surviving members of her own immediate family, but there are a number of nephews, nieces and cousins, all of whom mourn her loss, also a host of dear friends. She had always been closely affiliated with the Mokena M. E. church.

Miss Duncan had a remarkable memory and could tell many interesting incidents of the early pioneer days in this section. She also loved nature and during the years she was confined to her home she often sat by an open window and loved to see the birds and the other inhabitants of the beautiful woodland which surrounded her home, making an ideal pastoral scene. To have known her was a real inspiration to value the higher and beautiful things of life.

Funeral services were held Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in her home with Rev. Chas. Knight, pastor of the Mokena M. E. church, officiating. Mr. Albert Hindle of Joliet sang "Beautiful Isle of Somewhere" and "Lead Kindly Light."

Interment was made in the Marshall cemetery on the family lot. Thus closes the final chapter of a long and useful life well spent.

Large Crowd At Frankfort Memorial Day Exercises

A very large crowd attended the Memorial Day exercises at Frankfort. Rev. Dr. J. K. Joliet was the speaker of the day at the program held on the Frankfort public school grounds. The Frankfort band and school children took part in the musical program. The soldiers graves in Pleasant Hill cemetery were decorated by the school children.

The Ladies Aid of the Frankfort M. E. church served refreshments on the school grounds. In the evening the Ladies Aid of St. Peter's Evangelical church served their annual supper in the church parlors.

641 Students Graduate From Joliet High School

Thursday night 641 students of the Joliet Township High school graduated from the Junior College and high school. Among the graduates were students from Mokena, New Lenox, Frankfort and Marley.

Miss Helen Cappel received a teacher's certificate and has been engaged to teach the Francis school for next year.

Sine 1930 5356 students have been graduated from Joliet High School.

New Lenox Votes On School Bond Issue Saturday

This coming Saturday the tax payers in the New Lenox school district will be called on to vote for or against the issuance of $10,799 in bonds to be applied on the cost of building additional school rooms to the New Lenox public school. The entire cost of the project is estimated will reach $35,000, the major part of which will be paid by the WPA. The present school rooms have been so congested that a portable school building was erected. A few years ago the present building was not adequate enough to take care of all the pupils that came in this school. The polls of the coming election will open at 7 a. m. and close at 6 p. m. If this proposition is voted down the entire project will have to be dropped and it is likely that next school term many of the classes will only be able to meet half day periods.

FORMER MOKENA POSTMISTRESS IN AUTO CRASH

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lynk and the latter's mother, Mrs. Millis Knickerbocker of New Lenox, figured in an auto crash near Delavan, Wis., Monday when the car they were driving was struck by another car. Mrs. Knickerbocker suffered a broken collar bone and Mrs. Lynk sustained a fractured rib. Mrs. Knickerbocker was brought to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Earl Roth in New Lenox, while Mr. and Mrs. Lynk went to their home on Maple road. Both accident victims are reported to be improving nicely. Mr. Lynk escaped injury.

Chicago Couple Married By Mokena Police Magistrate

Police Magistrate Albert Hentsch of Mokena performed his first wedding last Saturday night when he officiated at the marriage of Miss Helen Green and James Jack, both of Chicago.

The wedding took place in the sun parlor in the Andrew E. Wachter home. The couple took their place before a bank of flowers and Magistrate Hentsch performed the wedding rites.

The bride was gowned in blue and carried a bouquet of roses. The bridal couple entered the sun parlor at 8 o'clock to the strains of a wedding march played by Eddie Wachter. The attendants were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Eckert of Chicago.

At the close of the wedding ceremony a wedding supper was partaken by 75 guests. The rooms were decorated in yellow and white.

The bride is a friend of the Wachter family and it was always her wish to be married here.

The bridal couple and their guests arrived at the Wachter home in a heavy downpour of rain, but the dampness did not dampen the gay spirit of the wedding.

Joliet School Head Memorial Speaker At New Lenox

Dr. Gayle Hufford, superintendent of the Joliet City Schools, delivered the address at the Memorial Day services held in the grade school auditorium on Monday morning, and his topic was "American Idealism."

Mr. James Gurley was master of ceremonies; Rev. William Ellis gave the invocation. Several patriotic musical numbers were played by the band. Roll call was read by Miss Ramona Roth; Mrs. Ward Bush led in the Pledge to the Flag; and Francis Gillette was heard in a patriotic vocal solo, accompanied by Mrs. Howard Ayres; Edward Marshall, marshal of the day, headed the procession by the New Lenox Boy Scout Troop, No. 60; followed by the New Lenox and Manhattan bands. The school children carrying flowers and flags, placed them on the Soldiers' graves in Maplewood cemetery. Rev. Wm. Ellis gave the address to the Unknown Soldiers at the cenaphth. The New Lenox band played two marches. Taps were sounded by Douglas Brown. Guy Knickerbocker fired the salute. Mrs. J. E. Francis asked the benediction. During the afternoon a group placed flowers and flags on the soldiers' graves in the Marshall cemetery.

Truck Ditched Due To Flooded Road

A very heavy rain and thunder storm of almost cloud burst proportions swept this section Wednesday afternoon. The water came down so fast that the ditches along the highway could not carry it off fast enough with the result that many of the paved roads were flooded from 8 to 12 inches deep. At the corner of Harlem avenue and 183rd street the pavement was under water to the depth of over one foot. A truck driver coming along at the time of this miniature flood stage lost control of he truck and ran into the ditch. The Bell Telephone repair truck came along shortly afterwards and assisted in pulling the ditched truck back onto the pavement. No damage done and no one hurt.

Ill. Druggists Protest Anti-Cigarette Tax Measure

Governor Horner and the State Senate are being forwarded vigorous protests from the Illinois Pharmaceutical Association against Senator Ward's bill to impose an additional tax of three cents on every package of cigarettes sold at retail in Illinois cities.

The protests are based on a resolution adopted unanimously at the association's annual state convention in Chicago.

These large-scale retailers of cigarettes view the proposed tax not only as an additional burden—hiking the average cigarette smoker's present tax from $21.90 a year to $32.85 a year—but in effect and substance as "anti-cigarette" legislation.

They point out that as such taxes are added to an impost which Congress has already called "a sales tax of monstrous proportions," more and more thousands of smokers, men and women, are denied the solace and enjoyment of their cigarettes. Keep it up, they say, and it results in prohibition of cigarettes—in operation an actual "anti-cigarette" law, with all the attendant evils of "boot-legging" and loss of much of the revenue which the state now derives from cigarette sales.

The association further goes on record as opposed to the extension of special taxes upon any articles as being a dangerous interference with both business and consumption.

Orland Hands Worth First Defeat

Orland Park won their second league game Sunday when they set down Worth by the score of 4 to 1 behind the excellent pitching of Pat Homerding. Orland scored early in the game by bunting 3 hits and an error to score 3 runs in the second inning. The leading stickers for Orland were Ludwig and Homerding with 2 hits each. The great defensive play of the Orland infield was a highlight of the game. Worth threatened in the ninth when the first two men at bat hit safely, but Pat settled down and retired the side in order, without any damage being done. Sunday, Orland plays the Oak Forest at Orland. Everybody is invited to come out and cheer the boys on to victory.

New Tinley Fire Truck Passes A Successful Test

The village of Tinley Park received their new Ford V-8 fire truck last Friday afternoon. The truck was driven in from Detroit. On Tuesday night it was given a thorough test. According to the contract of the manufacturers the new fire engine was rated to pump 550 gallons of water per minute. The test had 3 lines of hose in action and 750 gallons per minute was pumped.

The new outfit is up to date in every respect and will afford ample fire protection for this entire territory. This new truck is equipped with booster tanks, ladders, hose etc. The complete outfit cost $3700. It was paid for in cash.

The money was raised through local subscriptions and proceeds from benefit dances. The Tinley Park Fire Department is prepared to fight any fires whether in the village or in the open country adjoining.

The old fire truck is a Reo which was sold to the village of Dixmoor sometime ago. This was delivered to that village Saturday of this week. This truck had been in use by the Tinley Park fire department for 11 years and in all that time, had only travelled 1500 miles.

THE CAMERAMAN WAS THERE!

These news pictures will go down in photographic
history . . .

On May 6, 1937, a routine assignment gave news photographers the greatest picture story of all time when the Hindenburg burst in flames over Lakehurst, N. J. Not so tremendous, but equally thrilling was Photographer Harry Knapp's aerial view of Harold Parkhurst, the daredevil parachute jumper who touched off his cigarette 5,000 feet in the air. And near Dexter, Iowa, an alert cameraman caught the picture of unrestrained emotion (below) when a posse closed in on wounded Marvin Barrow, notorious bandit, and his hysterical wife. Pictures in this FOTO-FEATURE were selected by A. J. Ezickson, famous news photographer and author of a dramatic book about his profession, "Get That Picture!"

FOTO-FEATURE

On August 12, 1934, Gordon Israel tried to land his plane at 80 miles an hour after winning the 50-mile free-for-all contest at the Omaha air races. A quick cameraman caught the result, shown above. The plane bounced, landed on its nose and then settled to the ground. Israel was unhurt and walked from the smashed plane unaided. Split-second action is demanded of the photographer who would catch a picture like this. Sometimes, seldom, it's a matter of luck, but many a cameraman gets gray hair from constant nervous tension.

The news camera also catches pathos. This picture of despair so great it gripped a baby was one of many photographic masterpieces emerging from the Ohio and Mississippi valley flood area in January, 1937.

Who was responsible for the bloody battle at South Chicago, May 30, 1937, when police clashed with strike demonstrators near the Republic Steel corporation plant? Here was an instance where news pictures found their way into official hands, studied by members of the Senate civil liberties committee in an effort to fix the blame. The above shot was snapped a split-second after a policeman's nightstick bounced off the head of a fleeing demonstrator. His fellow protestors lie prone, either wounded or cowering to avoid the policemen. This was not the first time news photography has been used in official investigations. It happened when the Hindenburg crashed. Pictures of the Panay bombing incident proved invaluable to the American state department.

Radio and Weather

The United States weather bureau says that radio waves do not affect the weather, and statements that have appeared from time to time that the tremendous outpouring of radio waves all over the world has caused bad weather are without scientific basis.

In comparison with the tremendous amount of energy broadcast continually into the atmosphere as a result of thunderstorms, the amount added from the radio stations is comparatively minute.

Popular Circus Soon To Appear In This Section

Circus Day, with its perennial appeal to all ages, will be the attraction for many people of this vicinity when Russell Bros.' Big 3-Ring Circus and Wild Animal Menagerie exhibits at Blue Island on Monday, June 6 afternoon and night.

The nationally popular Russell Circus is presenting an all-new performance this season which discredits the old saying "If you see one circus you have seen them all." Combining the fondly cherished elements of "big top" tradition with the latest modern trends, the program abounds with interesting novelties and innovations, supplementing the always-alluring feats of skill and courage by daring acrobats, lovely lady aerialists and riders, capering clowns and all manner of animal performers.

To mention just a few of the features on the eventful two-hour program, there are the Albert Hodgini, Jr., equestrian troupe; the Flying Stars; the Roberts troupe of aerial bar artists; the Morris Family of springboard acrobats; Don LaVola, wizard of the slack wire; the Aerial Ortons; and the famous Russell Bros., dancing high-school and liberty horses and performing elephants.

The entire big show performance is, of course, plentifully interspersed by the playful antics of the clown contingent, and is followed by an unusually meritorious wild-west exhibition. Ample time is given before the performances to inspect the wild animal displays without extra charge in the big menagerie tent, and many curious and entertaining features are presented in the sideshow museum.

Performances are given twice daily, at 2 and 8 p. m. with doors to the menagerie and big show opening one hour earlier.

"Ancient and Modern Necromancy, alias Mesmerism and Hypnotism, Denounced," was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, May 29. The Golden Text was, "Take heed that no man deceive you" (Matt. 24:4).
Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Put on the whole armour of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places" (Ephesians 6:11, 12).
The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Evil thoughts and aims reach no farther and do no more harm than one's belief permits. Evil thoughts, lusts, and malicious purposes cannot go forth, like wandering pollen, from one human mind to another, finding unsuspected lodgment, if virtue and truth build a strong defence" (p. 234).

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries,
Representative 7th District, General Assembly of Illinois.

Shall the twelve thousand and more independent school districts in the state of Illinois be ruled by a non-salaried, nine-member state board of education at Springfield, appointed by the Governor, or shall they continue to enjoy home-rule?

This is the burning question which is running like wild fire throughout the entire state. It involves political factions in the General Assembly, leading university professors, state and county superintendents of public instruction, associations of teachers and school boards and nearly all state-wide civic associations which are interested in the schools such as Parent-Teacher associations, Leagues of Women Voters, Woman's clubs, American Association of University Women, etc.

Seek Administrative Board

On the floor of both houses of the legislature there are re-criminations aplenty, and they center around Senate Bills No. 6 and 7, introduced by Senator Stuttle of Litchfield at the behest of Governor Horner. These bills are very much like those introduced by Senator Stuttle more than a year ago in the regular session and they seek to establish an administrative state board of education and a fund of $1,000,000 to be given by the state board to needy high schools none of which at the present time receive state aid.

In order to get the full picture, one must recall that a year ago the effort to secure a state board was futile because the Stuttle Bill was choked to death by a faction opposing the Governor in the Appropriations committee of the House. But even before its death, the original bill had been changed so that it would not have established an administrative, regimenting school board, rather by amendments favored by the teachers, school boards and the state and county superintendents, the board would have been merely a helpful advisory board to assist the legislature by making recommendations for new laws that might help school districts throughout the state.

Opposed by School Leaders

Senate Bill No. 6, introduced at the present special session, harks back to the administrative type of school board so insistently advocated by Governor Horner and, just as insistently objected to by the organized teachers, county superintendents, local school boards and, more importantly by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, John A. Wieland and Frank A. Jensen, the Governor's candidate for state superintendent, in the primary election in April. The issue was for or against a state board of education and Mr. Wieland won out.

Fear Dictatorial Board

The bone of contention over which there is such an acrimonious discussion is the section in the bill which gives a state board the powers to prescribe minimum standards of education, buildings, grounds and equipment, teachers' salaries and transportation and which permits the state board to withhold state aid from schools that do not file budgets with it or comply with its mandates. These provisions make the board an administrative bureau and in the eyes of its opponents constitute an entering wedge of state centralized domination in local school affairs. Many educational authorities state that the provisions would give the board the implied right to dictate text books.

Advocates of the bill say that it will not produce the result feared. They say that the granting of administrative powers does not mean that they would be exercised. Its opponents ask, "why then, should the powers be included?" Most pointedly numerous senators and representatives who supported Superintendent Wieland in the primary election say, "See, what did we tell you? Here is exactly the kind of regimenting machine which we told you Governor Horner insists upon establishing."

Urged to Call Meetings

So great is the antagonism to the type of board that Senate Bill could establish that State Superintendent Wieland has instructed every county superintendent of schools in the state that they owe it to the school boards and teachers in their counties to call meetings at which the true implications of the bill may be smoked out through discussion. Following this suggestion, Noble C. Puffer, county superintendent of Cook County, has issued a call for such a meeting to be held on June 8. A year ago when Mr. Puffer called such a meeting, the debate was so sharp that it resounded over the whole state and was one of the causes for materially amending the old bill.

Anticipating such meetings as are now being called throughout the state, the executive committees of the various organizations of teachers, school boards, joint councils and individual civic groups have already been discussing the situation. In several instances so sharp has been the division of opinion that rifts have occurred in important associations.

DATES SET FOR V. F. W.

NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT
August 21-26 inclusive has been set as the week for the 39th annual National Encampment of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States at Columbus, Ohio.

Although two months distant, Posts already are making plans for participation in the annual reunion and convention. Delegates to be elected later on the basis of one delegate for every fifty members, will be accompanied by numerous other local members of the V.F.W.

The fact that the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States was founded at Columbus on September 23, 1899, will be a factor in drawing what is expected to be a record attendance at the 1938 Encampment. Thirty-nine years ago next September, thirteen veterans of the war with Spain decided to organize a permanent society for the perpetuation of the comradeship they had known overseas. Similar groups were being organized about the same time in Colorado, Pennsylvania and elsewhere, by returned survivors of the Spanish-American war, and these various groups, under various names, were amalgamated at Denver in 1913 under the name: Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

Colonel William H. Duffy, veteran of the war with Spain and the World War, and present chairman of the city sinking fund commission of Columbus, will be chairman of the executive committee in charge of the V. F. W. Encampment. Governor Martin L. Davey, an honorary member of the V. F. W., will be honorary chairman of the Encampment Corporation Committee, and Mayor Myron B. Gessaman, of Columbus, will be one of the many distinguished persons who will serve as a member of the general committee in charge of arrangements. Joseph E. Cress, manager of the convention bureau of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, already has announced that the 39th annual National V. F. W. Encampment will be the largest convention ever held in that city.

Responsibility and Failure

Side-stepping responsibility would make a fitting epitaph for most of the people who fail to get on in the world, to contribute anything to society—people who never achieve independence, never make anything of themselves.

"Octopus" New Thrill Ride At Riverview Park

The "Octopus," new ride as thrilling and exciting as its name implies, was opened to Riverview this week, adding another attraction to the galaxy of more than one hundred the park offers Chicago and fun-seekers.

This season Riverview begins its 35th year, and, if attendance records of the past fortnight are prophetic, 1938 will be the greatest season of the park's history. Ever since opening day, throngs have swarmed to the popular rides, and filled to overflowing their favorite attractions.

These visitors are finding many new features at Riverview this season. Of chief interest is the "Silver Flash," shining stainless steel roller coaster, and the miniature "Indianapolis Racer," where speed fans test their own driving skill.

New streamlined "tear-drop" cars have been installed on the "Blue Streak" and the "Zephyr," adding speed and thrill possibilities to these already ready rides. Even the old favorites "Bobs," long record holder for popularity, is now streamlined.

But those who seek less exciting fun are not forgotten at Riverview. Less daring fans enjoy the ground rides—the new "Octopus," the "Krazy Ribbon," the "Whip," the "Tumble-Bug," — the list is numerous.

Fun possibilities at Riverview have no age limit, and there is a very special section for the youngest of all. In it are a tiny merry-go-round, a distinctive ferris wheel, and other toddler-size features. The winding journey along the Midway, miniature train, which makes a in the miniature train, is another favorite with small visitors.

From the People

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

Sentinels of the Republic

Washington, it seems, has been hearing again from varied groups of our population.

A large number of housewives have made formal protest against the rising costs of homemaking threatened by reckless expenditure of public funds.

A famous automobile manufacturer has discussed current problems at a White House luncheon.

Groups of men prominent in business and financial affairs have urged constructive action and co-operation in steps leading toward recovery.

A number of notable liberals have insisted on the right of every man to earn a living.

And from countless homes and offices throughout the nation have gone letters demanding that Congress think in terms of increased production and employment, rather than political objectives.

Washington should heed such suggestions. They come largely from the people themselves—whom the men that wrote our Constitution recognized as the source of all authority.

They reflect a growing national concern over a record of drooping indices of production, mounting lists of unemployed, increasing burdens of taxation and debt, and the continued substitution of a thin relief for the steady jobs which millions seek and only constructive recovery can supply.

Edicts, theories and experiments, however hopefully submitted, have not supplied the answer. But the spirit and the enterprise of the people themselves have solved similar problems in the past. And there is every reason to believe that, given free scope, they will again.

Certainly the people have a right to demand that opportunity.

How America
Proves Its Case

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

In recent speeches spokesmen for the dictator states of Europe have indicated a desire for a "doctrinal" bout with the democracies.

By this apparently is meant a readiness to argue the relative merits of the two contrasting systems of government. Particularly, it seems, they would like to argue with Americans.

But Americans don't need to argue. They need only point to the evidence, so apparent in their own nation, of what the average citizen enjoys under the advantages of democracy in contrast to the sacrifices and limitations imposed by dictatorship.

What dictator nation, for example, has witnessed an expansion of national growth and prestige comparable to that of our American democracy?

What dictator nation assures the freedom of speech, freedom of the press and freedom of religion which have been foundation stones of our American democracy since the nation was born?

What dictator nation can show anything even remotely approaching the high standards of living and wages that America has offered throughout its history?

What dictator nation gives to every citizen a voice in the conduct of his government, and control over his elected officials?

What dictator nation offers to every citizen the wealth of opportunity exemplified in the careers of Lincoln and Edison and others too numerous to mention?

What dictator nation—founded on the outworn traditions of the dead past—can look to a future so full of promise as our own?

America has no need to argue the advantages of democracy. It proves its case by concrete examples.

County Rates Are Announced For Crop Insurance

Crop insurance which will guarantee wheat growers three-fourths of an average wheat crop in 1939, will cost farmers of Cook County, an average of 2.3 bushels per acre, it was announced today by Farm Adviser, Hughes. For insurance that guarantees one-half of an average crop, the rate will average 1.2 bushels per acre.

The county rates reflect the average per acre loss in Cook County during the 10 years, 1926-35. The premium that an individual wheat grower will have to pay for insurance will depend half on this county rate and half upon the crop losses on his own farm. The rates for each farm will be computed in the branch office of the corporation.

The average yield an acre for the county during the 10-year period was 18.6 bushels. However, the cost of insurance is not based upon the average amount of yield, but on the year-to-year variations in yield.

Two farmers with the same average yield for the 10-year period would not necessarily pay the same premium for the same percentage coverage, Hughes pointed out. The farmer who suffered but little crop loss would pay less than the farmer who suffered frequent and heavy losses, even though their average yields were the same. Cook County rates will be available in the offices of all county AAA committees, about which the county crop insurance program will center.

Each farm established its own premium rate. The low risk area in which Cook county is located does not have to help carry the load of an area of higher risk such as the dust bowl or semi-arid districts.

The figures farmers need for calculating their insurance will also be available in the county committee offices for farms which participated in the AAA wheat adjustment programs. The county committee will arrange for an appraisal on farms for which these figures are not available.

The premium a farmer pays covers only the actual cost of the insurance. Administration costs and costs for storage of insurance reserves will be paid by the Corporation.

How Government Can Help

By FRANKMON PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

In recent weeks America has heard an increasing number of demands for closer cooperation between government and the forces of production, in the long effort to achieve recovery and reemployment.

Various men and groups representing the productive capacities of the nation have indicated their eagerness for common action toward this objective.

They have pointed out that in production lies the solution to our pressing unemployment problem; that by production, both on the farm and in industry, was created the high American standard of living; that only through the restoration of production can the prosperity which is the natural condition of America be recaptured.

From the days of the pioneers who, by their courage, enterprise and labors, converted forests and prairies into the greatest farmlands on earth, that has been the American path of progress. Its efficacy is apparent—not only in our national growth in size and power, but in our advancement beyond other nations in the general well-being of all our people.

And despite the set-backs of recent years, America's capacity for production still remains unbounded. In the soil, the mines, the industrial and commercial resources of our country lie unlimited possibilities of production.

Here, as probably in no other nation, we have both the desire to consume and the ability to meet that demand. If our capacity to resume production can be unleashed, the way to recovery is opened.

The producers of America are eager to resume. They ask cooperation of government. They ask that government think and act on behalf of all the people, not certain groups or classes or blocs. And government in granting such encouragement can put America many strides forward on the long road to recovery.

"Sarah Lynn—" he said her name queerly in a choked voice, and kissed her, a fierce kiss, deep and desperate.

Then she was leaping out into swift and stinging air and was amazed to find that she did not immediately fall. The speed of the Hermod was carrying her along beneath it, face downward, with her arms and legs spread out like a starfish. There was the strange sensation of traveling across the air rather than through it.

"He kissed me!" she exclaimed. "Gunnar kissed me!"

She began to fall, her body twisting and turning. Now she was looking up at the plane, now down at the earth which was coming swiftly, perilously closer.

"There's something I must do, now!" she thought anxiously. "Oh, yes!—The cord! But where is that ring?"

Her fingers fumbled for it. It seemed to be lost in the webbing. Why hadn't she kept her hand on it all the time? She turned over again and saw the Hermod still above her but further away, somersaulted and saw the earth rushing up to meet her. Why hadn't Gunnar taken her higher than three thousand feet?

Sarah Lynn thought suddenly of her mother. She had a poignant picture of Adelaide Dana's upstairs sitting-room, pretty and peaceful, with potted plants whose every leaf glistened, and a canary warbling tenderly in an expensive cage, and quantities of framed photographs of her big brothers and herself and young Bill in all stages of infancy and childhood.

She found the ring and gave a desperate jerk.

Now! She knew exactly what would happen. The rip-cord would release the pack and the spring ribs of the little pilot chute would open instantly, catching the air and dragging the main chute out into a long line and the wind would rush in at the bottom and expand it. It simply couldn't fail: Gunnar and Conrad and Vance Le Roy had checked it thoroughly. "And even if it doesn't work," she told herself sensibly, "there is the emergency chute! I'm not rattled," she rejoiced. "My mind is running like a clock. And Gunnar kissed me! He was white as a sheet and scared to death about me, and he kissed me! And it was the kind of kiss—"

There was a weird noise which was something between a whistle and a shriek: something was fluttering overhead, and then snapping, loudly, urgently.

"It's opening!"

Then a gun went off somewhere, a shocking, thunderous boom, and her downward progress was halted so abruptly that she thought her arms and shoulders were being torn loose from her body. There were uncounted instants of confusion and terror, and then peace enveloped her.

Her chute opened and was functioning perfectly. She was floating gently, and everything was quiet about her, a sweet, celestial quietness which was soothing and comforting.

She could see the ambulance moving slowly to keep in line with her. She had lost the Hermod for the moment, but surely Gunnar would land as quickly as possible and come to her. That kiss, she felt, was not final: it must be a prelude. Even if it had been given in high excitement, it stood for an emotion which wasn't to be disposed of with this adventure. Fliers did not marry. Oh, didn't they? Then what?

There was a confused clamor of voices, cheerful, exultant.

"Good girl!" Conrad Jordan said, lifting her to her feet. "Perfect performance!"

"Atta girl!" Vance Le Roy was unfurling her harness, warmed for once into enthusiasm.

"Where is Gunnar?" Sarah Lynn demanded.

Old Pete from the airport was swearing softly and happily, paying her high praise with picturesque embellishments.

"Hold still—" Conrad Jordan had taken out his handkerchief and was wiping her face, and there was bright blood on the white linen.

"What's that from?" she asked impatiently. "I'm not hurt."

"Of course you're not, just a scratch or two when you were dragged."

"Where's Gunnar?"

"He'll be here just as quick as he can set the ship down," her uncle's friend said. "Now we'll just get aboard and let them run us back to Lynn and the old lady—" He was steering her toward the ambulance.

"I'm not hurt. I'm not going to ride in that thing!" she told him spiritedly. "Where will he come down?"

"Quickest way to get there," he said, taking her arm in a firm grip. "We'll all pile in. Half a mile away!" He lifted her and set her inside and a white-suited orderly grinned and congratulated her.

"I want Gunnar," Sarah Lynn said

"He'll be here in a jiffy. Lynn and your Granny need to see you before they're convinced you're safe, though we signaled them. Well, did it all come off according to schedule? Did it follow the pattern?"

"Oh, perfectly! It was heavenly after the chute opened," she answered, stooping to look out of the ambulance window. "I don't see the Hermod."

"But you can hear him? Right over us," Vance Le Roy said.

The matron and the cripple and the old governess greeted her in character. The ancient woman saw in her the reincarnation of her own dim, daring youth, choosing, as she had done, the brightest adventure of her period, and the paralytic sublimated his own helplessness in her courage and skill.

"I told 'em it was all plumb foolishness, tagging you round with that hospital wagon, Sairy Lynn," her great-grandmother said. "I said you'd come down like a leaf off a tree. Us Danas we most generally do what we set our minds to! Leastways, us dark ones."

Lynn Dana smiled into her eyes. "I'm glad for you," he told her,

Now!

"glad and proud. You've given me my best moment, Sarah Lynn."

Miss Pennington's high color was faded but her diction was as crisp as always. "Let me tidy your hair a bit, she bustled up to her. 'I should have thought to have you wear a close net.'"

The girl slipped out from under her hands. The Hermod was down and Gunnar Thorwald was out and running toward her. She went to meet him.

"I'll know as soon as I see his face," she told herself. "I'll know the first second—"

Gunnar was still white, but she saw at first glance that he was angry, and her heart turned over in terror. There was in his pale face a look of fright and of fury. She did not know what it meant.

Then he reached her, and she knew immediately and entirely what it meant, for he caught her into an embrace of urgency and iron and bent his bare yellow head and kissed her again, and the kiss on the earth differed only from the one at an altitude of three thousand feet in facility and duration.

Sarah Lynn was held in a vise; she could not move her body or her lips, but her mind ran and leapt and soared.

"He does care! He cares—and he's furious—but he can't help it!" Suddenly his arms loosened about her and he held her off, putting her thoughts into words.

"I have not wanted this," he frowned in grave anger. "It is not my wish, my plan. Freedom I like. But—" he looked young, bewildered, agitated, and on his pale face were scarlet flecks from the still bleeding scratches on her own.

Sarah Lynn tugged at her handkerchief and pulled it out of her pocket. She was smiling, and she felt very gentle. "There is blood on your face," she said tenderly.

"Your blood!" he said, sternly. "It is your blood upon me."

Sarah Lynn stood on tip-toe and wiped the little red smears away as handily as a mother would have done.

"So," he stated unhappily, "now I must love you!"

"I knew you did," she told him. "You could not know. I did not know, until the moment when you would make the jump."

"That's what I meant. When you kissed me. It was different from any other kiss I ever—"

He said quickly, sharply—"You have, then, the so great knowledge of kissing? Who has instructed? Who—"

Conrad Jordan was calling them, walking toward them.

"Gunnar," he said casually, "Le Roy will hop the Hermod back to the field for you. We're all lurching with the old lady, and she is eager to get started. Mind driving my car? Lynn asked me to ride with him."

"Wait!" the youth said imperatively. "A thing has happened—"

"Well, I should say so!" Jordan agreed genially. "Miss Sarah Lynn Dana, daring young aviatrix, completed a sensational parachute jump with all the nerve and skill of a professional."

But the Norseman was not to be deflected. "Always I have said fliers shall not marry." He looked at Sarah Lynn again with grave resentment, sighed, lifted his hands, palms upward, let them drop. "I make now the discovery that I love this girl."

"I think," Sarah Lynn murmured with a sudden accession of shyness, "I ought to ride back with Great-granny!" She ran away swiftly to the car.

CHAPTER X

Gunnar stood still in a clump of madroños when he and Sarah Lynn were out walking after lunch.

"Now we talk," he announced stiffly.

Sarah Lynn halted before him, standing with folded hands.

"Love I did not want. Love, I said always, was a weakness."

"I know," she nodded meekly.

"Freedom I wanted; freedom like birds in the air." He seemed to be accusing her of having ruined his plans.

"I'm sorry," Sarah Lynn said. "I mean, I'm sorry you're so furious about it and so miserable, but after all"—she tried to sound reasonable and detached—"birds do come down sometimes, don't they, and build nests and—"

He shrugged his lean shoulders. His mouth looked beaten, baffled. "Everything blocking the way, I have conquered. Now this conquers me. I know it. Never can I lose you. If I fly across the ocean, still you are there. My life breaks in pieces. What now can I do?"

Sarah Lynn thought wistfully of one thing at least, and apparently the same idea occurred to him, for his long arms shot out and caught her to him in a straining hug.

"So, then! It is finished!" he lamented.

It was beginning, she exulted to herself.

He released her and took her thin shoulders in a tense grip. "There remains a thing for you to tell," he said imperatively. "How have you the deep knowledge of kissing?"

"Oh, but I haven't, really!"

"Yet, you said you could tell—"

"Well, of course—boys—it always happens. But it doesn't count at all," she said earnestly. "Duncan was always trying, but—"

"From this day"—the ultimatum sounded—"you jump no more; you kiss no more."

"Very well," Sarah Lynn agreed in a small voice.

He frowned and sighed. "Tonight I speak to your father."

"Oh, Gunnar, not tonight, please! Let's wait a little—"

He shook his head. "We quickly marry. We go to Norway."

They go to Norway. She sat down limply with her back against a pungent laurel. "Gunnar! It takes my breath!"

He sat down beside her. "It is my country. Also, I have there the good chance."

"My mother—" Sarah Lynn said in a stricken voice.

He disposed of her mother briskly. That was the way it happened to mothers: daughters grew large and made marriages and went away with their husbands.

Husbands! Marriages! Norway! The world was filled with strange and startling words.

"Gunnar, have you noticed that funny old thing on Uncle Lynn's wall—the pipe-rack in burnt wood, with the verse?"

He nodded.

Clothing and Housefurnishings Can Be Fireproofed by a Simple Home Process

Fabrics can be fireproofed and made safer for clothing and housefurnishings by a simple and inexpensive home process of dipping them in a colorless liquid, a solution of seven ounces of borax and three ounces of boric acid in two quarts of hot water. This treatment, says Dr. Martin Leatherman, of the bureau of chemistry and soils, United States Department of Agriculture, will not protect fabrics from injury by flame or intense heat, but it will prevent the fabric from bursting into flame, and spreading fires that endanger life or cause the destruction of homes.

The borax-boric acid solution may be applied by dipping fabrics until they are thoroughly moistened, then wringing out the excess and allowing them to dry. Treated cloth may be ironed just before it is dry. Or the solution may be applied by sprinkling or spraying the fabric enough to moisten it. This method is likely to be more convenient for rugs, draperies, and upholstered articles. Addition of a little soap will make the treatment more effective for canvas and other textiles that

"Did you read it?"

"It matters not how strait the gate—"

"Yes. I have thought, 'But of course! It must be strait. How shall a gate be crooked?'"

"It's a different kind of strait, Gunnar! This means narrow. You know, in the Bible? 'the strait way.' A girl made that for Uncle Lynn, just after he knew he would sit still in a chair all his life, and he's kept it there all these years although he's not a sentimental person at all, and it looks so pathetic among his etchings and his beautiful books. He must have loved her, I think. That sort of poetry is terribly out of style, now."

"It matters not how strait the gate, How charged with punishments the scroll, I am the master of my fate: I am the captain of my soul."

"Like hoop-skirts or bustles and bangs. People don't read—"

"That I like," Gunnar interrupted. "Captain of my soul. It is good."

"Yes. But the thing I'm thinking of is the 'strait gate,' Gunnar. That comes first, you see. And before I can think of Norway, and us, I must tell my mother and that will be the straitest gate in my life."

He laughed. "You jump over it! And I wait for you on the other side."

But Sarah Lynn shook her head. "No; you don't jump over strait gates. You crawl through."

Danavale was difficult for Sarah Lynn in those days. It was a joyful escape to have Conrad Jordan invite them to a house-party at his Lake Tahoe lodge. He was staging an air tour to demonstrate the practicability of an airport at an elevation of over 6,000 feet in the High Sierras, and Gunnar Thorwald, Norwegian ace, making the fifteenth plane in the meet, gave international importance to the event.

Sarah Lynn rode with him in the Hermod, flying over the Santa Clara valley and the Sacramento. It was perfect flying weather, clear, bright, calm, with boundless visibility.

"This is the way our life is going to be," the girl told herself. In just a little space of time the trials and the tears would be over—beneath them, behind them.

Gunnar Thorwald was thrilled and stimulated; she had never seen him so alert and eager.

"This also I like!"

He brought the Hermod, swift messenger of the gods, smoothly and silkily to the earth and Conrad Jordan came hurrying to meet them, elated with the triumph of his project—15 shining ships of the air on the line at Rabe's field.

Conrad Jordan got to his feet and moved restlessly about the beautiful big room with its dark wood and mellow leather and hearty Navajos. It was evening.

"Play, please," Gunnar said from the hearth.

Conrad Jordan sat down at the piano and hunted through a pile of music.

The youth lifted himself on an elbow. "No! The music you have yourself made."

His host nodded. He had found the shabby notebook he was looking for and took out some clippings.

"Here's a thing I found in a paper—'The Feeling of Stars.' Random lines; fellow jotted down bits of his favorites here and there. I've been meaning to work out something"—he smoothed out the printed slip and read aloud: "I am in love with high, far-seeing places—and this—'Space, and the twelve clean winds of heaven'—"

He began to play, feeling his way among the notes, the chords.

FAMOUS STORIES

King Arthur's
Death Told in Tennyson Tale

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

IN THE last days of King Arthur, his men were led in revolt against him by the traitorous knight, Sir Modred. Warfare had continued many months and the time had now come for the last struggle. Among those faithful to the king was the knight, Sir Bedivere, now constant companion to the lonely and aged king.

Overlooking the camps which were arrayed for battle, the king thought sorrowfully of his knights whom he was now fighting. His heart was heavy as the battle began, relates Lord Tennyson in his story, "The Death of King Arthur."

On every side there was strife to the death until the field was strewn with men. At the point of Excalibur, King Arthur's famous sword, Sir Modred met his end. But, alas, King Arthur was sorely wounded. Carefully Sir Bedivere carried his king off the field. But King Arthur knew that now he was to die.

Calling his loyal knights to him, he requested Sir Bedivere to carry Excalibur down to the lake front and throw it into the water.

The knight thought this a strange request, but he lifted the treasured sword and went his way to the lake.

Standing beside the water, Sir Bedivere thought of the needless waste of so many jewels and of so much beauty and he hid Excalibur in a tree. When Sir Bedivere stood again before him, King Arthur asked what he had seen when the sword was thrown into the water. Sir Bedivere answered, "The rippling of the waves."

"Betrayer!" cried the king. "Do as I bid you!"

Standing again beside the water the knight thought: the king is ill and does not know what he says, so I will hide the sword. Accordingly,

"BEAUTIFUL" LIFE

Alfred, Lord Tennyson, lived a life as beautiful and unreal in its romanticism as that of any hero in his King Arthur stories.

The drowning of Arthur Hallam, Tennyson's college friend who understood and encouraged the sensitive poet, caused Tennyson to suffer a nervous collapse and to live ten years in retirement. At the end of that time he presented for publication "In Memoriam," an elegy to Arthur Hallam, a poem said to have brought more comfort to sorrowing people than any other poem.

Tennyson was not wealthy, and he and his sweetheart wanted to leave the path of his life open for writing instead of trying to earn a less precarious livelihood, so they waited many years before marriage was possible. Speaking of his marrying Emily Sellwood he said, "On the day I married her, the peace of God entered into my soul."

At the death of Wordsworth, Tennyson was made Poet Laureate of England, having long enjoyed the friendship of Queen Victoria. After that he was so besieged by sightseers, that he was forced to move to the Isle of Wight, which place is now famous for having been his home. Tennyson died in 1892, at the age of eighty-three.

he once more placed it safely away. The second time the king asked what he had seen and the knight gave the same answer as before, "The rippling of the waves."

With great effort King Arthur cried, "If you do not do as I command, I will kill you with my own hands!"

Sir Bedivere ran to the lake, wheeled the sword high, and with all his might, hurled it into the lake. Instantly an arm clothed in rich apparel rose from the lake, caught the sword, brandished it three times and drew Excalibur under the waves. When the king had heard what Sir Bedivere had seen, his soul was satisfied. Then he made his last request of his knight, that Sir Bedivere would assist him to reach the shores of the lake.

Old Order Changeth.

When the king stood beside the waters, there appeared in the distance a barge. Nearer and nearer it came, until the richness of the black draperies could be seen. Three queens weeping in lamentation stood on the bow looking toward King Arthur, Sir Bedivere supported his king, until the outstretched arms of the queens assisted King Arthur to take his place on the barge.

Slowly the barge began to leave the shore. Standing alone as King Arthur moved into the distance, Sir Bedivere cried out, "I am left alone! What shall I do?"

Kindly answered the king, "The old order changeth, giving place to new—Pray for me, for more things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."

So ended the life of King Arthur, for many years ruler over the Round Table.

Lesson for June 5

SERVING BY PERSONAL
DEVOTION TO CHRISTLESSON TEXT—Mark 14:3-11, 27-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—She hath done what she could. Mark 14:8.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Mary's Present to Jesus.JUNIOR TOPIC—Mary's Love Gift.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Showing Our Love to Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Heart of Christian Service.

"The love of Christ constraineth us" (II Cor. 5:14) was the all-sufficient moving force back of the greatest life of service rendered by any man. It is this personal devotion to the One whom we love "because he first loved us" (I John 4:19), which makes Christianity "different from all other religions. Christianity alone acts through this natural and deep hunger of mankind with a personalized religion which can be a satisfying joy and pleasure. Yet at this point Christians fail the most and make difficult the work of serving Jesus. They see religion as a job to be done, a form to be observed, a duty to be fulfilled" (W. R. King).

We need to renew that devotion to Christ which expresses itself in true worship. Prayer is too often asking for things; praise, thanking for things (unless we become so engrossed with them that we forget to return thanks); and worship, which is a coming to God in adoration and thanksgiving for what He is rather than what He can give, is forgotten. Our Heavenly father wants us to show love toward Him. The act of Mary was pure personal devotion and worship, and its fragrance lives to this day.

I. Wasted—But Eternally Saved (vv. 3-9).

The dark hours of betrayal and death were before our Lord. All around Him was hostility. Even in the inner circle of the disciples there was misunderstanding and bickering. Mary (to be distinguished from the sinful woman of Luke 7) with the quick intuition of an understanding woman's heart knew what He was passing through, and with a magnificent act of love stood by Him in the fellowship of His sufferings. Dr. Morgan points out that it was "an impulsive act . . . born of the prodigality of love daring not to calculate." In the words of verse 9, Jesus declared that the gospel and that which this woman had done were to "stand side by side with each other forever. That keen intuition of love, that uncalculating outpouring of love, was Godlike, and an act in fellowship with the act of God by which a world is redeemed."

Judas, who was a thief, said she had wasted money that should be used for the poor (John 12:6). The other disciples thought well of his argument and murmured against her. But Jesus commended her. To be thrifty and frugal is commendable, but there are times when the heart should speak without being silenced by the drawing of purse strings.

II. Saved—But Eternally Lost (vv. 10, 11).

Judas betrayed Jesus for thirty pieces of silver. He "made" some money. The fact that he did it by betraying the Son of God may be worse in degree but is not worse in kind than the betrayal of the youth of our land by those who make merchandise of their eternal souls. A recent news item from England declared that church organizations were making money out of properties publicly known as centers of prostitution. The leaders deplored the situation, but said they could not prevent it without losing the income of the property. Why not lose every cent rather than be party to the betrayal of any man or woman?

III. Bold Words—But Weak Actions (vv. 27-31).

Verses 12-26 tell of the gathering of the Lord and His disciples for their last passover and for the establishment of the Lord's supper. As they left the sacred meeting and went out into the Mount of Olives Jesus foretold His betrayal and His coming denial by the disciples.

Peter, quick with his tongue, and bold in spirit, spake swelling words of devotion and assurance. Sadly the Lord foretold his threefold denial of that very night. Again Peter and all the disciples declared their willingness to die with Him. They undoubtedly meant what they said, but reckoning without the weakness of the flesh they failed Him.

The lesson that is written large in this story for you and for me is, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (I Cor. 10:12).

Complaining

We have no more right to put our discordant states of mind into the lives of those around us and rob them of their sunshine and brightness than we have to enter their houses and steal their silverware.—Julia Seton.

In fact, the body of the suicide was barely cold in death before an unsuspecting citizen was tarred and feathered, and the latter event caused another explosion because it forced a sergeant to desert from the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. At any rate, let's get back to the beginning.

Tim Jellis was a lazy, good-for-nothing sort, and a booze-fighter, to boot, all of which kept his hard-working wife, and his two fine children on the outermost edge of destitution and want. Neighbors did all they could, of course, for the sake of the youngsters, and just when things were about as bad as they could be, Mrs. Jellis had a bright idea. She would change the house a bit and take in a lodger, someone who would pay for good food and a warm room. With the income from the boarder, she could make it all right, she felt sure, and soon a Charlie Brown was part of the household. Now Brown was a sober, hard-working chap, and when he saw the general economic conditions in the Jellis household, he dug down into his pockets and provided plenty of food, some necessary clothing, and a nice pile of fuel.

Naturally, the heart of Mrs. Jellis was about to burst from sheer gratitude, and she put herself out to make Brown feel right at home. His slightest wish was law, and the Jellis began to emerge from destitution to a fair measure of comfort and well-being. All of this, strange to say, aroused the anger and displeasure of the no-account husband and father who spent his days in local barrooms bewailing the fact that Brown the lodger was stealing his wife and gradually breaking up the Jellis home.

Instead of shooting the lodger, as most people had expected, Jellis stuck the rifle barrel in his own mouth, pressed the trigger, and scattered his brains all over the bedroom walls. The coroner and the Mounted Police soon realized that it was a plain case of suicide, and the case would have been closed right then had not a gang of half a dozen masked men barged into the Jellis home and seized Charlie Brown, the lodger. They took him to a lonely spot and there they tarred and feathered him from cap to boots. They drove him back to the tiny settlement and threw him into the lobby (?) of the local hotel which was hardly more than an ordinary six or seven-room house. Hours later Brown found his way back to his room in the Jellis home, and about the only clue he had as to the identity of his kidnappers was that all the talking and all the orders had been spoken by a man with a distinctive western drawl such as was common along the Montana boundary.

Things quieted down, and Brown stayed on at the Jellis place. And then, months later he was sitting on a hotel veranda in Lethbridge, Alberta, when his ears caught up a voice that he would never forget as long as he lived. He knew he had found the leader of the kidnap gang, and in half an hour the owner of the distinctive western drawl was breaking down under stiff questioning on the part of Men of the Mounted. Later he admitted leading the gang, and was held for trial. And then, while assembling all the necessary data and information for the trial, the inspector of the Mounted Police in the district made a most startling and distressing discovery. Five of the six gangsters were accounted for, and the inspector, while moving heaven and earth to find out the identity of the sixth, found that the much-wanted lawbreaker was one of his own sergeants, a man with years of creditable service behind him, and a man who had always been above reproach in every way. At any rate, perhaps a bit enraged by this discovery, the inspector did all he could to make a strong unshakable case against the sergeant. But, as the days passed, it appeared that the inspector was more hell-bent on "getting" that sergeant than anyone else, and just when conditions looked bad for the three-striper, he turned up missing.

The fact is, the tiny settlement was loyal to the sergeant, and while the inspector was fussing and fuming over evidence and court procedure the sergeant's many friends dug into their pockets, made up a sizable purse of money, and staked the sergeant to a midnight getaway on one of the finest and fastest horses in the region. Moreover, while the inspector was looking up the law on this and that, a fair-sized escort of mounted citizens were escorting the sergeant over the border into Montana.

And . . . that's how one thing led to another, until . . . well . . . it was difficult to find out just where this all started and when and where it finished. At any rate, it added a few gray hairs to the inspector's scalp. No doubt about that.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Describes the Place of Fats in the DietNationally Known Food Authority Compares the Different Cooking Fats and Shortenings.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th St., New York City.

THERE are, perhaps, more false notions concerning fats than any other class of foods.

Some homemakers, considering them as "fattening" only, try to eliminate them entirely from the diet. Others have the impression that foods containing fat are difficult to digest, and for this reason deprive their families of many delicious and healthful foods. Both points of view arise from ignorance of dietary facts.

Fats Are Necessary to Health

Fats have a number of important functions to perform. They are a concentrated fuel food, having more than twice the energy value of an equal weight of protein or carbohydrate.

One-half ounce of fat, that is one tablespoon, yields 100 calories, and were he able to eat it, a man could obtain an entire day's fuel from three-fourths of a pound of fat. It is interesting to note that it would require nearly eight pounds of cooked rice to give the same number of calories.

In Oriental countries, where large populations live in great poverty, fat is usually scarce and it is necessary to consume huge quantities of food in order to meet the daily fuel requirements. As a result, most of the people develop distended abdomens.

Children Must Have Fat

Because fat is such a compact food, nutritionists agree that for growing boys and girls, and men engaged in strenuous physical exercise, fat is almost essential, if they are to get enough total calories.

There is also experimental evidence that at least a small amount of one or more of the unsaturated fatty acids must be supplied by the food if normal nutrition is to be maintained. And two competent investigators found, experimentally, that the presence of fat in the diet tends to conserve vitamin B in the body.

Some fats, especially those from animal sources, are rich in vitamins A and D, and fats made from vegetable oils may contain vitamin E.

Fat and Hunger

Perhaps the greatest service performed by fat is its ability to give "staying power" to the diet—to satisfy hunger. In this respect, it directly affects the disposition and may influence the ability to enjoy life.

The shortage of fats in European countries during the World War graphically demonstrated how a deficiency of this class of foods can destroy the morale of entire nations.

With supplies cut off or very greatly curtailed, the warring countries found it necessary to ration fats closely. As a result, their people were always hungry and dissatisfied, even when their actual needs were satisfied. In this connection, it is interesting to note that a slice of bread and butter or margarine will delay the onset of hunger longer than a slice of bread and jam, even though the number of calories may be the same.

Different Fats Compared

As sources of energy, the different food fats are very similar. Thus, the homemaker's choice may be determined by preference, convenience, economy, and the use to which the product is to be put.

The various forms of edible fats and oils are derived from both animal and vegetable sources. They include butter, margarine, lard, compounds, which are a mixture of animal fats and vegetable oils, hydrogenated fats, and the liquid vegetable oils.

Butter and margarine are used chiefly as a spread, and it is interesting to note that the annual per capita consumption of margarine is steadily increasing, as homemakers have discovered that the use of this less expensive product releases more money for milk, fruits and vegetables. Margarine is interchangeable with butter for dressing vegetables and in doughs containing spices, fruits and chocolate. Its shortening power and keeping qualities are similar to those of butter.

Lards, compounds and other shortening fats are useful not only as a means of increasing palatability and food value, but to add flakiness to baked foods and to produce a crisp coating which seals in the minerals and vitamins of fried foods.

Lard is used chiefly as a shortening for pastry, and a good grade will be found to be white and free from objectionable odors. The highest grade, called leaf lard, is produced from the leaves of fat in the sides of the hog.

When made by a reputable manufacturer, the compounds prepared especially for cake making, for shortening pastry and for deep-frying, are wholesome, highly nutritious and give most satisfactory results. They are a most economical form of shortening.

Digestibility of Fats

Because of their ability to retard digestion somewhat and thus give satiety value to a meal, the impression has grown up that fats are "difficult" to digest. This results from confusing the length of time required for digestion and the completeness with which a food is digested.

When "digestibility" is regarded in the popular sense of the ease, comfort and speed with which the digestive organs carry on their work, it is conceded that fats in general retard the secretion of the gastric juice and thus cause food to remain longer in the stomach.

On the other hand, most fats have such a high coefficient of digestibility, that under normal conditions only about one-twentieth of the fat eaten escapes digestion. Experiments indicate, for example, that the coefficient of digestibility of oleomargarine is 97.5 per cent.

It is sometimes erroneously stated that pastry is indigestible. This statement is without foundation, provided the pastry is made from a high grade shortening and is properly baked. Similarly, fried foods come in for a great deal of criticism that should not be charged to the use of fat, but to incorrect methods of cooking. If food is properly cooked in fat that has a high smoking point, there will be no opportunity for decomposition products to develop.

How Much Fat?

Nutritionists have ample evidence that health is best served when 30 to 35 per cent of the total energy value foods is provided in the form of fat. This will include the fat of meat and the fat used in cooking the many delicious fried and baked foods which make eating a pleasure.

Questions Answered

Mrs. M. L., Jr. — Dandelion greens make an excellent food. They contain more phosphorus than any other common leafy vegetable, and supply vitamins A, B, C and G.

Miss C. B. R.—It is difficult to compare the iron content of meats because of variations in the amount of fat. It has been established, however, that organ meats, as liver and kidneys, contain more iron than muscle meats, and that pork and lamb contain much less iron than beef.

Mr. F. K. C.—Answering your query as to whether pineapple juice possesses special properties as a laxative—all fruit juices contain fruit acids, which tend to have a stimulating effect upon the entire digestive tract. However, the pulp of any fruit is far more effective than the juice in providing normal elimination.

Mrs. N. H. R.—As to whether a tendency to overweight is inherited: the body build is inherited. That is, some individuals tend to be short and stocky; others are tall and slender. However, there is no reason why the stocky individual should allow himself to become obese. Frequently, a condition that is blamed on inheritance can be traced to faulty habits of diet, exercise and sleep, passed from one generation to another.

Treating the Rubber Plant.

The gloss of a rubber plant is greatly increased by dropping about a teaspoon of sweet oil about its roots once a month.

Preserving Books.

To keep books on shelves or in cases in good condition, sprinkle occasionally with powdered camphor.

Identifying Sheets.

If you use sheets of two different sizes, one for single and one for double beds, fold sheets for double beds in a large square and those for a single bed in smaller squares. You will then have no difficulty in finding the right sheets.

Kitchen Necessity.

A knife rack saves the edges of blades and prevents cut fingers.

Too Salty Soup.

A slice of raw potato added to soup to which too much salt has been added, and boiled in the soup for a few minutes will absorb much of the salt.

To Clean Picture Frames and Glasses.

Wash with warm water and ammonia (a teaspoonful to a quart of water). For gilt frames, use the water in which onions have been boiled, as it will restore their brightness.

Preparing Rice.

Before boiling rice, wash it in hot water to remove any soil and also the fine starch powder that may be on the outside of the grain which makes it sticky.

Are Women Better Shoppers than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean—rugs, floors, bathroom tiling—and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads advertisements, too!
